Dogs and bees and snakes, oh my!

By Christopher Ingraham

WASHINGTON POST

Is any place truly safe from the threat of bloodthirsty beasts?

Short answer: Yes, everywhere actually, because statistically speaking your chances of getting killed by an animal are basically zero.

But!

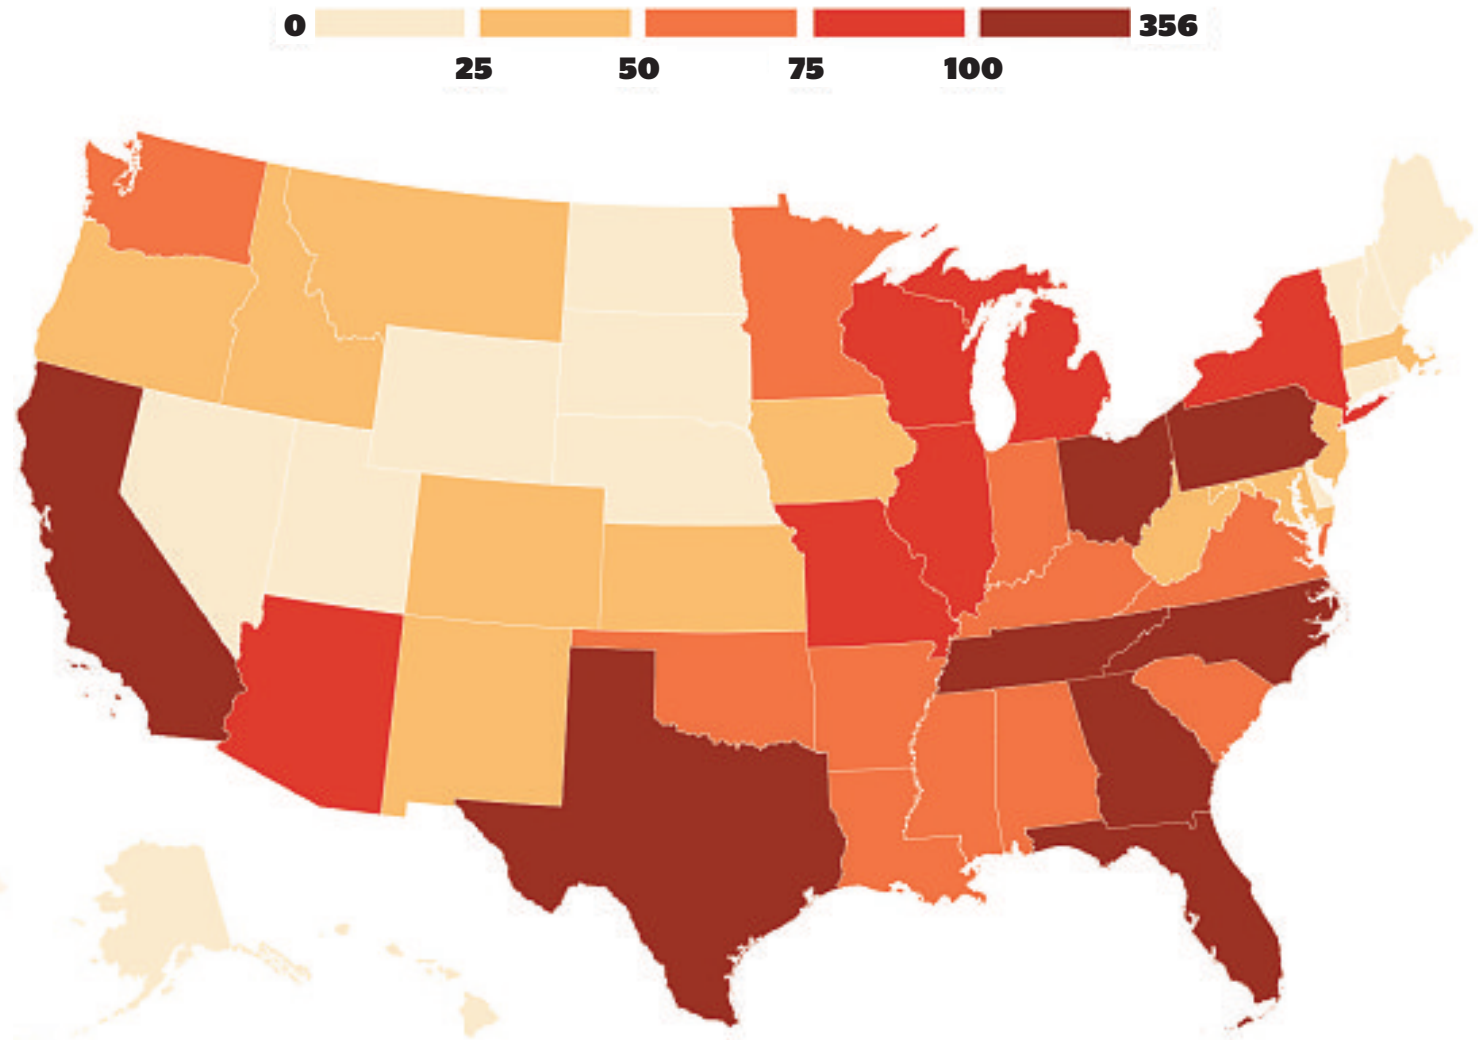

If you suffer from an extreme debilitating phobia of sharks or bees or carnivorous cows, which would be the absolute worst places to live in the United States—that is, where are animal fatalities the highest?

Fortunately for us, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention provides geographic breakdowns of its fatality data. The map at right tallies all 2,989 animal-caused deaths in the U.S. from 1999 to 2013.

It's important to note that these are raw numbers, not rates. This is because the numbers are generally so small that rates aren't terribly useful—the CDC often suppresses them or lists them as “unreliable.”

Where people get killed by animals

Number of animal-caused fatalities, 1999-2013

Dogs

All maps show deaths from 1999-2013, by census division

Bees

Deaths caused by bees, wasps and hornets

Snakes

Other mammals

Deaths caused by mostly farm animals — cows, horses, etc.

Other venomous things

Death caused by spiders, scorpions, centipedes and other bugs

Happy Monday, Chicago! Wipe the sleep out of your eyes and take a look at the new RedEye. That's right, we're changing things up around here. But don't worry, it's only slightly. We know that once we go to print, our news is old news compared with whatever notification is popping up on your phone. So we're using that reality to change up how we do things with our print edition.

Our news, sports and features coverage will be more up to date than ever on redyechicago.com, our social media platforms and (spoiler alert!) our new iOS and Android apps, which will launch next month. But with our print product we're rethinking how we put together our newspaper. From now on, you'll see fewer news briefs but more analysis on bigger news stories. Sports scores are easy to find online, so instead we'll bring you previews of upcoming games and in-depth interviews with athletes. And we all know award shows like the Oscars and Grammys tend to run super late, so we'll take a step back and recap the best or funniest moments to share later in the week.

We're calling this a "face-lift" because along with these changes will be a more playful look to the paper. The design updates will be subtle: a new typeface to brighten up our headline text (see today's cover headline, for example), and instead of using exclamation points for our movie and restaurant reviews, we're using the stars from Chicago's flag.

We're also adding some new features. The idea behind our "News Flash" page 3 always has been to debrief you on the story

City issues warning for meningococcal disease

By reporter Christine Smith
A local outbreak of meningococcal disease in Chicago has health officials urging residents to get vaccinated against the bacteria, which can be fatal.

The city recently found that three local cases of meningococcal disease, a rare but potentially fatal bacterial infection, were linked to a common source: a group of friends who attended a party at a local bar. The city is now urging residents to get vaccinated against the bacteria, which can be fatal.

that will be what most people are talking about that day. We're now calling it the "Big Picture," and some days we might tell that main story in a more visually driven way using graphics, artistic photos from our staff or reader-submitted pictures after a big weekend. This type of visual storytelling also will be seen on our "Off the Grid" page on Fridays, which will feature stories told through flowcharts, stats and charts.

Our back page of "Red Hot" celebrity news and our "Studs and Duds" sports page always have been crowd pleasers, so we're adding a similarly styled news page called "Re-Briefs" to round up the quirky news tidbits from the day. In addition to "Ask Anna," on Fridays, we'll have a new dating column called "Threesome," in which 103.5 KISS-FM's morning show host, Brotha Fred, and two other writers will offer up relationship advice in response to a reader- or listener-submitted question. Once a month, we'll feature a RedEye staff bio and photo paired with that person's picks of what to eat, drink, read, listen to or watch.

We're pumped about our face-lift and hope you are, too. Feel free to share your feedback on social media or via an email to redeye@redyechicago.com. Thanks for reading!

When social media becomes destructive

Facebook, Twitter use can bring on depression, envy, relationship issues

By Lisa Mulcahy | LOS ANGELES TIMES

If you're like most of the world, you make time for following friends on social media. In fact, 71 percent of adults who go online use Facebook and 23 percent use Twitter, according to the Pew Research Center. That isn't a bad thing at all. Positive posting and communication can be a real boost to your confidence and sense of connection to others.

It can be surprisingly easy, though, to unconsciously slip into less healthful behavior on social media, and that can lead to anxiety and depression.

Want to beat that "Facebook funk"? Researchers have identified which habits can lead to trouble and how to change your social media perspective to improve your mood and outlook.

Don't believe all their hype

A study by the University of Houston found that buying into the details of other people's postings on Facebook can lead to symptoms of depression. If you're looking at your college roommate's wildly romantic honeymoon photos, for instance, it's natural to feel inadequate if you're still single. Researchers found that this is a very common form of distorted thinking because study subjects who felt this way didn't take into account that they were looking at a "highlight reel."

"This can be an unhealthy perception because, of course, people present themselves in the best possible light with whatever message they are sending out on Facebook," says study co-author Mai-Ly Nguyen Steers, a teaching fellow at the university.

The more time you spend on Facebook, the more these false perceptions can become cemented. (Those who participated in the study spent about 30 to 60 minutes a day on Facebook.) To get a more realistic view of a friend's experiences, Steers stresses, it is important to spend time together in real life, not just virtually.

Feeling envious? Stop lurking

Do you feel a stab of jealousy every time you read on social media about your cousin's gorgeous new home or your boss' exciting European vacation?

"Surveillance" of those you know in order to get an inside glimpse of their material success is a potentially destructive behavior, ac-

ANASTASIA VASILAKIS ILLUSTRATION FOR THE LOS ANGELES TIMES

ording to researchers at the University of Missouri. Measuring monetary or lifestyle achievements of someone you know can lead to negative feelings that person will not be aware you have and easily can lead you to create tension in a relationship where there was none. The more often you visit a particular person's Facebook page, the more envious, and eventually depressed, you may end up feeling too.

"Most people who suffer from Facebook envy and depression tend to lurk quite a lot, and that repetition reinforces those bad feelings and impressions," says study co-author Margaret E. Duffy, chair of the strategic communications faculty at the Missouri School of Journalism.

"If you're constantly checking up on people

"Most people who suffer from Facebook envy and depression tend to lurk quite a lot, and that repetition reinforces those bad feelings and impressions. ... If you're constantly checking up on people and not feeling great about it, ask yourself, 'What am I accomplishing by doing this?' "

—Margaret E. Duffy, chair of the strategic communications faculty at the Missouri School of Journalism and not feeling great about it, ask yourself, 'What am I accomplishing by doing this?' " Duffy says.

Also, figure out what factors in your life are causing stress and making you sad, and therefore susceptible to envy.

Don't tweet your every thought

A second study by the University of Missouri found that people who send Twitter messages often—about anything and everything they're doing—experience more strife in their marriages and romantic relationships than those who don't tweet about their lives in detail.

This is most likely because over-sharing your life with others on Twitter, direct messaging and posting images can create relationship conflict. Not only are you potentially developing bonds with new people, but also that bonding may deepen and lead to infidelity and subsequently divorce, according to the study's author, doctoral student Russell Clayton. Twitter-related conflict doesn't just affect bored, long-married couples either. Clayton found that couples who had been together for both short and long durations could be negatively affected.

Another study by researchers at Boston University and Pontifical Catholic University of Chile in Santiago found that heavy social media users are 32 percent more likely to think about leaving their spouses.

In India, large crowds commemorated the first International Day of Yoga on Sunday in mass public events across the country. Prime Minister Narendra Modi proposed the event last fall at the U.N. General Assembly, and his year-old administration held yoga demonstrations around the globe Sunday through its more than 190 diplomatic missions, including in China, Indonesia and the United States. LOS ANGELES TIMES; GETTY IMAGES PHOTO

THE DIGIT 150

That's the estimated age of Speed (left), a Galapagos tortoise at the San Diego Zoo who died Friday.

According to the LA Times, Speed had been in decline for some time, and keepers had treated him with medication, hydrotherapy, physical therapy and even acupuncture. Finally, a decision was made to euthanize Speed, who had been at the zoo since 1933. Rest in peace!

All about that bass

After Sean Mulroney and his band finished playing a benefit concert Thursday at the Double Door, the Wicker Park club he co-owns, he realized that his white Ampeg Baby Bass, an iconic stand-up bass crafted in 1965, was missing. Mulroney said he has had the instrument for about 15 or 20 years and estimates its worth at about $7,000 or $8,000. The band, Kevin Flynn and the Avondale Ramblers, posted a message on Facebook on Friday asking for people to pass the word about the missing instrument. Mulroney, who has filed a police report, also said he is offering a reward for the instrument. Anyone with information is asked to call Mulroney at 312-731-3197 or 773-489-3160. TRIBUNE

One cool cat

For the first time, a Los Angeles organization's Hero Dog award has gone to a cat. In May 2014, Tara the cat fought off a dog that attacked her then-4-year-old owner. Tara body-slammed Scrappy, a chow-mix who lived next door, after the dog got out of his yard, ran for Jeremy Triantafilo, grabbed his leg and started shaking it from side to side. Tara chased the dog toward its home. It was later euthanized.

Footage of Tara's heroics, from home security videos, made her an international celebrity when Jeremy's father put it on YouTube. It's gotten over 24 million hits so far. There was one alteration in the trophy: The word "Dog" was scratched out and the word "Cat" etched in. AP

THE DIGIT $181,215

That's the estimated retail value of all the counterfeit Blackhawks merchandise (right) federal agents seized during the Stanley Cup Final and Thursday's celebration, authorities said Friday. The initiative targeted illegal vendors in Chicago and Tampa Bay. Over 90 percent of the 4,376 fake items were seized in Chicago. TRIBUNE

GETTY IMAGESSTAR

Who's got the best celeb fans: Cubs or Dodgers?

Years ago, I used to joke that on any given day in Los Angeles you could see Jack Nicholson sitting by himself in front of a bunch of empty chairs. Not at a film screening or on a private beach, but at a Lakers game.

Andy Frye

» redeye@
redeyechicago.com
» @trysportscomplex

In all seriousness, though, once the L.A. Lakers had won their first-in-a-while NBA championship in 2000 with Kobe Bryant and Shaquille O'Neal, under the tutelage of coach Phil Jackson, fans started to show up. There were other longtime movie stars and directors such as Penny Marshall, Adam Sandler and Hilary Swank, plus icons from other sports such as soccer dynamo David Beckham, and even drop-ins by reality TV's famous faces such as Paris Hilton (remember her?). Even those empty chairs behind the stars filled in nicely for games at the Staples Center.

It could be Southern California's beautiful weather, but baseball games in L.A. are a different deal. Ever since the late 1970s, the Dodgers have boasted a good crowd at Dodger Stadium, drawing at least 3 million fans for 15 consecutive seasons from 1996-2010. Since then, the Dodgers have won two division titles, in 2013 and 2014, and have a nice rivalry with the San Francisco Giants.

The Dodgers visit the Cubs this week for a four-game set, and it got me thinking about the fans on both sides and who has a more famous stable of supporters. Taking a spin through both fan rosters, it seems the Cubs have as many notable fans as the team from Tinseltown.

CUBS NICK OFFERMAN

Hopefully you didn't miss Offerman and fellow comedian Craig Robinson duking it out verbally in Funny or Die's "Chicago vs. Chicago" sketches. Offerman, clad in a Cubs cap, hurls anti-Sox insults at South Sider Robinson at a bar conveniently called The Dividing Line. If only every Cubs fan had Offerman's verbal kung fu skills.

DODGERS ICE CUBE

The accomplished rapper, actor and producer pretty much bleeds Los Angeles sports of any stripe. While Cube's favorite football team, the Raiders, may have moved back to Oakland for good (sadly), Los Angeles still has a good baseball team he can brag about.

PSY

A few years back, when every American without good musical taste was grooving to "Gangnam Style," Psy used to drop in at Dodger Stadium for baseball and face time.

KOBE BRYANT

The Philly-born NBA star, who lived in Italy during his father's own basketball career, has played his entire career with the Lakers.

For Bryant, the NBA offseason also includes Dodgers games. Just don't expect him to pass the peanuts to his former teammate, Shaquille O'Neal.

THE DUDE

Jeff Bridges: a fair-weather fan? "Well, that's just your opinion, man."

ANY CELEBRITY WHO THROWS THE FIRST PITCH

OK, I don't want to denigrate die-hard Dodgers fans. But just like courtside at Lakers games, the pitcher's mound at Dodger Stadium often is stocked with a movie star. On any given game day, Julianne Hough, Ginnifer Goodwin or Charlize Theron might toss out the first pitch.

SNOOP DOGG

Yes, he's thrown out the first pitch at a White Sox game. But the rapper makes no bones about rooting for the Dodgers. When he's not talking English Premier League soccer, that is.

SWITCH HITTER? MARISA MILLER

Whether it is that she's a huge baseball nut, or under contract from MLB because of her great pitching arm, swimsuit supermodel and past NFL spokesperson Marisa Miller has turned up in both a Cubs and Dodgers shirt, not to mention a National League jersey at past All-Star games. Double allegiance? For her, I don't mind.

JOHN CUSACK

The Evanston-raised actor often talks baseball with late-night hosts and journalists but does so with a more diplomatic tongue than Offerman and the typical Cubs fan. But his sports fandom doesn't stop there. It is fitting that Cusack, who often portrays contemplative and ambivalent characters in film, also supports the White Sox.

VINCE VAUGHN

Perhaps Chicago's most rowdy famous sports fan, Vaughn, who hails from Buffalo Grove, just looks the part of a Cubs guy. Like it or not, he also fits the archetype of the "Wrigleyville bro" whom Sox fans and baseball antagonists complain about. But what's a day game at Wrigley without someone getting tossed from the bleachers by security?

HILLARY CLINTON

Although she claimed to be a fan of the Yankees during her initial run for the New York Senate seat in 2000, the former first lady, U.S. senator and secretary of state was born and raised in Chicago and Park Ridge. It may be uncertain whether the current presidential candidate tuned in to last week's 17-0 win over Cleveland, but Clinton often can be seen touting a Cubs cap.

DONALD RUMSFELD

Long before Rumsfeld talked about "known knowns and known unknowns" (he wasn't talking about the Cubs' future), George W. Bush's first secretary of defense wasn't one for casual conversation but made mentions of Wrigley Field during news conferences. Also, Rumsfeld's wife, Joyce, reportedly is a bit of a Cubs superfan.

BILL MURRAY

While some celebrity Cubs fans receive less-than-warm welcomes (ahem, Jim Belushi), there likely never has been a more widely embraced Cubs supporter than Bill Murray. He probably could permanently replace Ronnie Woo Woo. And Clark the Cub, for that matter.

1	Tiger Woods was so bad at the U.S. Open ...	... he had to step aside and let me play through.	... he should call it the "U.S. CLOSED." Sorry, that joke was as good as his game.	... that for the first time ever, he didn't have the urge to bang the closest available female person!	... it was almost painful to watch. Almost.	... he looked like ME golfing out there. And that's pretty PATHETIC! #ItsOver
2	Who should be giving Taj Gibson advice as he recovers from surgery?	Fans everywhere. They're all as qualified and educated as doctors.	Patrick "I heal so fast I helped my team win the Stanley Cup" Kane.	A trustworthy source, like WebMD.	Not Derrick Rose.	Not D-Rose.
3	How much do Alex Rodriguez's accomplishments matter anymore?	His post-suspension feats feel as tainted as the "Fresh Prince" episodes with the second Aunt Viv.	If A-Rod reaches 3,000 hits in the woods, does it make a sound in the Hall of Fame?	About as much as Snooki's.	They used to matter?	Alex who? #NoOneCares
4	How scared are you that your favorite Blackhawks will be traded?	I go to bed crying, clinging to my Rundblad jersey every night.	Having to watch the lead actors on "Doctor Who" change has prepared me for the sense of loss. I miss you, Matt Smith!	LOL. "Favorite" Blackhawks. That's hysterical. I hope they all get traded so I can watch these bandwagon fans ugly cry.	My fave is Sharpie, so scared [bloop]less.	Tossing and turning thinking Jeremy Roenick may not be back. #Retire27
5	What did Chicago fans miss while they were paying attention to the Blackhawks?	Draymond Green's epic Warriors parade interview. (Google it.)	The Cubs have a player in Kyle Schwarber who looks like The Thing. Ironically, pitcher Jason Grimm doesn't.	Sobriety.	Absolutely nothing of importance.	Rain. Wait, you couldn't have missed that. Ummm, did anything else really matter? #WeWantAnother

HOPE AFTER HOCKEY

RedEye

Although it has no official name, you could call it Blackhawks Blindness. That's what afflicts much of Chicago when the team is streaking toward another Stanley Cup. As awesome as that feeling is—and no one wants it to stop—focusing on hockey can make fans lose sight of the city's other teams, which is why RedEye is happy to bring you up to speed.

Cubs

Joe Maddon's magic appears to be in full effect. Although the Cubs are third in the NL Central, it's mostly because they have the misfortune of trailing red-hot St. Louis and Pittsburgh. In fact, at 37-30 the Cubs would be a wild-card team if the season ended after Sunday's win. Repeat: The Cubs are on the verge of a playoff berth.

White Sox

Other than the sustained brilliance of Chris Sale (2.74 ERA), the Sox seem destined for a disappointing summer. That's what happens when you're last or close to last among all 30 MLB teams in runs (29th), hits (30th), doubles (30th), home runs (28th) and RBIs (29th).

Fire

The Men in Red find themselves last in the MLS' Eastern Conference at 4-8-2. The silver lining is several key players have missed a handful of games with national team duty, so maybe there's time for them to hit their stride.

Sky

Without Sylvia Fowles, the defending Eastern Conference champs are 3-3 and might need to lean more on star guard/forward Elena Delle Donne. Which could be just fine; she already has an Eastern Conference Player of the Week award under her belt this season.

Bears

Jay Cutler says he's happy with the new offense and new offensive coordinator Adam Gase. Meanwhile, tight end Martellus Bennett wants a new contract and skipped several team workouts. That said, as long as everyone stays healthy this summer, the Bears probably can call the offseason a win.

Bulls

So long, Tom Thibodeau, hello, Fred Hoiberg. And hello to whomever the Bulls pick 22nd in the NBA draft Thursday. Could it be Notre Dame's Jerian Grant or Wisconsin's Sam Dekker?

STOP. WATCH.

WOMEN'S WORLD CUP

U.S. vs. Colombia, Round of 16 | 7 p.m. Fox Sports 1

Colombia desperately wants to beat the United States. "They think we're a team they're going to walk all over and it will be an easy game for them," Colombia forward Lady Andrade told USA Today. "We're going to beat them since they like to talk so much." The thing is, the U.S. isn't sure what she's talking about. The countries do have a history; Andrade smacked Abby Wambach in the eye during the 2012 Olympics. But the war of words appears one-sided. The U.S. needs no more motivation than a berth in the quarterfinals, where China awaits the winner Friday.

'The Parking Garage'

Episode 23; Season 3

This always has been one of my absolute favorite "Seinfeld" episodes. It stands out because all the main characters spend the entire episode stuck in one location together (after forgetting where their car is parked in the garage). The mundane simplicity of the plot lets the absurdity of the characters shine through. The episode would almost be a decent setup for a slasher film if not for the only criminal present being their collective incompetence, and the only gruesome death being a goldfish.

—LENNY GILMORE

'The Boyfriend'

Episodes 34 and 35; Season 3

If I were to pause this look back at my favorite "Seinfeld" episode—in midair, mind you—you'd probably start laughing your ass off. This two-part episode featuring former Mets great Keith Hernandez is a classic based on its Zapruder film spoof alone. But you can't overlook Hernandez himself and the hilarious conflict he creates within the group. He's dating Elaine, but would he rather be spending time with Jerry? Not to mention the episode addresses a question that predates Barney Stinson and his "How I Met Your Mother" Bro Code: When is it too soon to help a friend move? Also, if you see Roger McDowell, run the other way.

—CHRIS SOSA

'The Pick'

Episode 53; Season 4

You can give a gold star to Julia Louis-Dreyfus for a lot of scenes on "Seinfeld." Her comedic chops are unparalleled. But "The Pick" takes the cake for my favorite Elaine moment, and subsequently my favorite "Seinfeld" episode. After Kramer takes a photo of Elaine for her Christmas card, it comes to her attention that her nipple is showing. ("Oh, my God! That's my nipple!" she says with a mouthful of apple and peanut butter.) She becomes the joke of the office with everyone calling her Nip. But the priceless moment comes when George—who didn't receive a Christmas card and can't understand why—confronts Elaine about it. Frustrated, she looks at him and asks him multiple times if he wants a Christmas card, and with one quick thrust, she shoves his head into her chest and says, "There's your Christmas card!" It doesn't get any funnier than that.

—SARA AMATO

'The Stall'

Episode 76; Season 5

Part of the genius of "Seinfeld" is that even its random, throwaway jokes tie into the greater humor of the story. No episode illustrates this better than "The Stall," in which George is obsessed with Elaine's "mimbo" (male bimbo) boyfriend Tony, Elaine is irate that a woman in the next bathroom stall wouldn't pass her some toilet paper ("I can't spare a square"), Jerry tries to hide that said woman is his girlfriend Jane and Kramer is convinced Jane is the woman he calls on a phone sex line. All of these connections run beneath the surface of seemingly pointless conversations between the four but tie together hilariously with Elaine dumping Tony once George injures him in a rock-climbing accident ("His face! Did something happen to his face?"), Jane dumping Jerry for believing Kramer that she's a phone sex worker and Elaine getting her revenge by stealing all the toilet paper out of every stall before Jane goes into the bathroom.

—LAUREN CHVAL

'The Hamptons'

Episode 85; Season 5

It's refreshing to see the gang get out of the city and head to the Hamptons for the weekend. Highlights of their getaway include an ugly (er ... "breathtaking") baby and a payoff involving Jerry's kosher girlfriend and lobster scrambled eggs. George is my all-time favorite character, and he really gets to shine here. Not only does he freak out when everyone else sees his topless girlfriend before he does, we also see him panic after getting caught naked with significant "shrinkage." He was in the pool, guys! —MICHELLE LOPEZ

'The Bizarro Jerry'

Episode 137; Season 8

"Seinfeld" hinges on Jerry, George, Elaine and Kramer mostly being terrible, ridiculous people. "The Bizarro Jerry," an episode referencing the "Bizarro" world of Jerry's beloved "Superman" comics, finds Elaine discovering how much more pleasant it is to hang with Kevin and his friends Gene and Feldman, all kindhearted opposites of her existing pals. A conventional sitcom would show Elaine choosing her old friends over her new friends. On "Seinfeld," the good guys toss her back into the depths of the awful and the stupid. Who says this is a show about nothing? P.S. Bonus points for the hilarious Kramer subplot, in which he begins a job for which he has no qualifications and was never actually hired.

—MATT PAIS

WHO STOLE THE SHOW?

For every main character on 'Seinfeld' there were at least a handful of minor characters who floated in and out of the core fours' lives. RedEye staffers picked their Top 5 minor characters. Check out redyechicago.com/seinfeld for more.

'The Dealership'

Episode 167; Season 9

If Jerry attempting to buy a Saab convertible with an "insider deal" from David Puddy—who is dating Elaine, then not dating Elaine, then dating Elaine—isn't enough to hook you, then look to the Twix. George Costanza enters the dealership painfully hungry, only to freak out for 22 minutes over a pesky vending machine, a mechanic with "a short name" and the only candy with the cookie crunch. Not even the outcome of a "candy lineup" ("They were all Twix! You've all screwed me again!"), like most things in his life, will fall his way. Elaine's relationship with Puddy, throughout every moment, directly impacts Jerry's deal. Rustproofing, transport charge, storage surcharge, additional overcharge, finder's fee ("Finder's fee? It was on the lot!"), floor mats, keys. Not to mention Kramer takes a car for a "test drive" for eight hours with the salesman until the car runs out of gas. The interweaving of the group's agony makes for the best use of a script and its cast in the entire nine seasons of the series.

Seinfeld, Maher: More cranky than comic these days

By Nathan Rabin | LOS ANGELES TIMES

On his podcast, comedian Todd Glass recently addressed the argument that the politically correct thought-control police would have destroyed the career of his icon George Carlin. Glass countered that if Carlin were alive today, he would have evolved with the times instead of holding on to the language of the past.

That's not terribly realistic. If Jerry Seinfeld and Bill Maher's now-frequent outbursts are any indication, great comedians are no better than anyone else at adapting to shifting mores.

Seinfeld made headlines recently because he said he was no longer willing to play college campuses, which he said felt stifling because modern students are too politically correct. On "Late Night With Seth Meyers" earlier this month, Seinfeld mentioned one joke that doesn't fly anymore—about how the hand gestures required to manipulate a smartphone make iPhone users look like gay French kings.

"I did this line recently in front of an audience—comedy is where you can kind of feel, like, an opinion—and they thought, 'What do you mean, gay? What are you talking about gay?' ... And I thought, 'Are you kidding me?'"

Maher has been on a similar tear. On "Real Time With Bill Maher" this month, he referred to Caitlyn Jenner as a "he" and then patted himself on the back for being bold enough to taunt the "pronoun police."

Both comedians seem to think they are taking stands against oppressive touchiness, but when I watch them rant, I think of old men yelling at kids to get off their front lawns. They see that their jokes don't get the responses they once did, but instead of blaming themselves, they blame the world.

In an interview with ESPN Radio, Seinfeld talked about his wife telling their 14-year-old daughter that, in the years ahead, she might want to spend more time in the city so she can "see boys." The daughter responded that her mother's assumption was sexist.

It's telling that Seinfeld didn't ask his daughter why such a comment was sexist but instead decided she "just wanted" to use words such as "racist," "sexist" and "prejudice." Without bothering to explore his daughter's thinking, Seinfeld decided that kids her age "don't know what they're talking about."

There is no healthy exchange of ideas in the scene Seinfeld described, no debate. Nothing is learned; nobody's mind is opened. It's like an episode of "Seinfeld."

Comedy increasingly is taking the form of a conversation rather than a one-way expression of ideas and information, and cranky older comedians who opt out of this dialogue risk becoming relics of an earlier era.

Musgraves wins again with dynamite voice, witty lyrics

SOUND BOARD

Josh Terry

» jterry@redeye-chicago.com
» @joshhterry

When Kacey Musgraves released her exceptional 2013 album "Same Trailer, Different Park," her undeniable songs and eminently likable personality put even the most vocal haters of country firmly in her corner. The now-26-year-old's dynamite voice and clever lyricism are into something wholly original or dispel quippy life advice that sounds like an ages-old idiom, such as on "Biscuits," in which she sings, "Mind your own biscuits and life will be gravy." She coos, "I'm never late to the party if I'm late to the party with you" on "Late to the Party," and on the carefree highlight "Die Fun," she posits, "Before we get to heaven, baby let's give 'em hell/We might as well."

These deceptively simple lines are her bread and butter, for better and worse. "This Town" lacks the innovative spark of her earlier material, saying little more than "small towns are nice." And "Family is Family" falls flat, failing to prove "family is all you have" but rather that Musgraves' family seems awful (see: "Yeah, family is funny, they'll ask you for money/Even though they know you ain't got no money").

In terms of gender equality, country music still has a long way to go. The community still is reeling from comments made by a prominent radio consultant who said, "If you want to make ratings in country radio, take females out," before adding his own bizarre metaphor: that women are the tomatoes (not the lettuce) in country's music's salad. With a refreshing voice and wit as progressive as Musgraves continues to display on "Pageant Material," it's obvious she'll instead throw those tomatoes at both the sexist forces plaguing country and the vapid songs that populate its airwaves—proving to be not just one of the best artists in the genre, but the one it needs.

such a winning combination that when she beat out Taylor Swift's "Red" for the Best Country Album Grammy, the pop sensation yelled over to Ed Sheeran, "I told you so." And how can Taylor Swift be wrong?

With Musgraves' follow-up, "Pageant Material," she sticks to her guns. Keeping the same co-producers and co-writers (Luke Laird and Shane McAnally), the effort's 13 songs—well, 14 if you count the woozy, Willie Nelson-featuring hidden track "Are You Sure"—are a consistent example of studio-sheen country. From the happy-go-lucky whistles and handclaps punctuating the smart-alecky opening pot innuendo "High Time" to the rollicking, string-laden "Cup of Tea," every arrangement is, like the neon cacti that adorn her live set, winking and kitschy but also immaculately rendered.

Throughout, Musgraves remains an incredibly masterful songwriter. She can flip clichés

TAROT.COM

Cancer June 22-July 22
Starting Wednesday, you'll have little trouble going after whatever you want—including in matters of the heart. Instead of making the first move boldly, you may prefer to lure your special someone in with emotional charms.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22
On Monday you might enjoy an exhilarating but unplanned encounter with your sweetheart. On Tuesday, you may not want to ask a friend for advice about an intimate matter.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Monday, reveal one of your innermost fantasies to your partner. If single, there's potential for you and a friend or acquaintance to develop a sexual relationship after Wednesday.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23
On Monday, your partner may introduce you to a person with enough clout to help take your dream to the next level. You two may also be about to team up to make a difference in a humanitarian endeavor.

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21
You and your lover might not see eye to eye this week on an intimate matter. Hiding what you truly need from your sweetheart will only set the stage for even bigger problems down the road.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You and your sweetie are in for a sexy adventure this week! Planning a trip to that exotic destination you've always wanted to visit would be perfect. After Wednesday, you'll find your desires connecting more to your emotional connection to your mate.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Surface arguments with your partner over silly matters are a reflection of your unwillingness to dig deeper and confront the true problem. Once you can name it, you'll be able to work together to overcome it.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Perhaps you feel as if you need to hide your financial situation from your lover. If you're serious about this person you may want to re-evaluate your approach.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20
From Wednesday to Aug. 8, you'll make it a priority to pursue pleasure. A new sexual relationship may develop. If in a relationship, you can anticipate more fun in the bedroom.

Aries March 21-April 19
This week, there's strong potential for a rapid development in your love life. Then, from Wednesday to Aug. 8, you might notice that it's harder to get turned on by your mate without emotional security. It's a must.

Taurus April 20-May 20
This might not be your best week for communicating matters of the heart. You might not believe anything your lover tells you. If you're keeping a secret you'll notice how it's beginning to erode the quality of your love affair.

Gemini May 21-June 21
A chance conversation with a pal or someone you meet at a party may turn into a love connection. This person may offer to introduce you to someone special, so be open. You might seek the advice of a friend on a relationship dilemma. His or her advice will be helpful.

$91.1M

That's how much money Pixar's "Inside Out" brought in this weekend in North America. It's the biggest opening ever for an original property (aka non-sequel and non-sourced work) for the studio, according to ew.com.

However, the record couldn't stop the dino domination of "Jurassic World," which brought in an estimated $102 million in its second week.

'Cause now we got bad blood

Taylor Swift is the new spokeswoman for musicians everywhere, apparently. Swift took a shot at Apple via Tumblr this weekend, blasting the new Apple Music app the company is set to launch June 30 by saying, "I find it to be shocking, disappointing, and completely unlike this historically progressive and generous company." The streaming service will be available for a three-month free trial, during which artists will not be paid for the use of their music.

THE QUOTE

"We got back to my trailer and, as soon as the door closed, she said, 'If I see you at the gym tomorrow, we're done! I'm going to leave you! That's it!'"

—Joe Manganiello (left) about how his fiancée, Sofia Vergara (right), threatened to leave him if he worked out, despite an injury on the set of "Magic Mike XXL." Good thing you listened to her, Joe.

Double take

Wait a minute, is that Justin Bieber (above, right) or "Orange Is the New Black" actress Ruby Rose (above, left)? The look-alikes met up at a party in Las Vegas over the weekend, according to people.com, and showed the world just how similar they look with an Instagram that Bieber appropriately captioned "#twinning." Rose, 29, who appears in Season 3 of the popular Netflix series, told Vanity Fair earlier this month that she's been mistaken for the 21-year-old "Baby" singer several times and their doppelgänger-ness is even referenced in the show.

THE QUOTE

"We must protect them, and invest in them. They are not a problem, they are part of the solution to the global crisis. They are the potential for the rebuilding and restabilization of countries."

—Angelina Jolie, calling for more action to support refugees, in a statement posted Saturday on the website for the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. Jolie, a UNHCR special envoy, traveled to Turkey in honor of World Refugee Day with her daughter Shiloh Jolie-Pitt.
